The new feature, Color Variations, introduces a new, more powerful way to manipulate images. Color Variations allow you to alter color, saturation, and brightness of a single or multiple areas in an image. To change colors, highlight an area of an image and click the little plus icon (+) in the top right corner of the color icon at the bottom of the screen. You can then alter the color of the area by dragging the color bar to the desired color. You can change the brightness of the color by moving the brightness slider left or right. You can alter the colors in multiple areas by highlighting the area and pressing the control (ALT) key. You can select multiple areas by selecting an area in an image and selecting all the areas you want to edit from a list that pops up. Q: Is the then() method generic? It's unclear to me whether the "then" method is generic. By generic, I mean whether it can work with any argument types. In the following example, should the variable type work? @ApiOperation(value = "Test") @GET @Timed @Consumes(MediaType.APPLICATION_JSON) @Produces(MediaType.APPLICATION_JSON) @ApiResponse(value = {@ApiResponse(code = 200, message = "OK", response = Result.class)}) public Result test(@ApiParam(value = "a", required = true, example = "b") @Valid final String a) { return Result.newBuilder().setA(a).build(); } A: The javadoc says: The value type of the then() method is the same as the return type of the try() or catch() method. so the return type of the then method is the same return type of your try or catch statements, and it is not generic. Unless your try or catch statements contains an uncaught exception handler, you don't have an uncaught exception in your try block, so the else branch of the try will execute and return an instance of Result. start talking. Stephen Bell (editor and writer, The Scotsman, Dunfermline): "It was amazing how little it was. The one thing I was grateful for was that we didn't need a car. But all we could do was walk around." Sian Smith (pictured right), Glasgow city Councillor for Renfrewshire North: "I was a bit loopy that day, so I couldn't believe that I'd been in some wars. I didn't see many people and it was very different. I had no idea what would happen next. "It was a lot quieter than I expected. I thought I'd see lots of shops, and there weren't many. There were some cinemas and a branch of Asda. "I just remembered seeing the word Trinity. There was nothing around the area to suggest this had happened. There were some roads blocked off, but just in the area. "You could see people were talking, but there was no one telling us anything. "You do wonder if you're going to come back to a different world, but it's important to try and see it as a positive thing. "Like I said, I was a bit loopy, so I was just happy to be back home. I had no idea how it was going to be, but I've been told it's fine and everything's going to be back to normal. "We just didn't really know what was going on." David Smail (press secretary, Renfrew and Inverclyde District Council): "It was relatively quiet. There was a wee bit of confusion. "It was a case of just trying to work out what was happening. There was one bloke who came in off the street, somebody said: 'Are we back? Are we going to war?' and the answer was 'No, no.' The main issue was walking back to our normal lives. That's what we were aware of. "There were a few people around, but nothing to a great degree. "There were a few stores that were open, but it was quite obvious there was nobody doing
